Non-Partisan Finance.

The great labor meeting appointed to take place in Chicago on the 15th proximo, and at which Secretary Carlisle will deliver an address on the money question, may prove the forerunner of a state of things at which the whole country would have reason to refolce. The meeting is to be non-partisan in character. Republicans, democrats, populists, will participate without regard to divisions on questions strictly political. The desire is to hear the money question stated in a non-partisan way, and by a man recognized as an authority on the subject. The invitation to Mr. Carlisle, therefore, did not grow out of his eminence as a democratic leader, nor was it intended to express, for or against, an opinion on any financial act of the present administration. His duties as the firancial officer of the government have afforded him opportunities for studying the money question in all of its important bearings, and the views so formed are the ones the labor organizations have expressed a desire to hear him state from the standpoint of a financier rather than from that of a party leader. And it is in this spirit that Mr. Carlisle has accepted the invitation, and will deliver the desired ad-

It is to be hoped that the Chicago meeting may inaugurate a series of such meetings, and that representative men of all parties and representing the different views on the question may be invited to address them. The money question, in its proper analysis, is not a political question, and should not be permitted to become a device for trading, or a subject for heated partisar discussion, in a national campaign. All the people are vitally interested in a just and wise solution of it, and this can only proceed from a calm and thoughtful discussion of it. The parties of course will handle it. and make it serve party ends as far as possible, but if prior to the holding of the national conventions the great governing masses shall have been reached by deliverances addressed to their reason and their business is terests rather than to their partisan zeal and prejudices, the effect will be of a beneficial character on the platform builders at St. Louis and Chicago. The work done there will be the better for the knowledge that it is to be examined and passed upon by a thoroughly awakened and Instructed popular interest and intelligence.

Men who labor are in the majority in this country. Their voice when expressed controls the country. The money question is and should be everything to them. The deplorable effects of a weakened public credit would fall first and heaviest upon them. This manifestation on their part, therefore, of a desire to hear from n en of recognized authority on the subject in a non-partisan spirit is one upon which the country, with every reason, may congratulate itself. Let silver men, sound money men, all be heard, and no man then shall be justifled in quarreling with the verdict.

A Temple of Justice.

Intent upon an endeavor to do that which nust sooner or later come to pass, Senator Morrill is once more on record as anxious to bring about the governmental purchasof the square north of the Congressional Library and east of the Capitol, so that on the site thus secured there may be erected a building devoted to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such a proposition has been advanced many times but it has never gone beyond the stage of a favorable report from the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. There is, however, a dual and pressing demand which may result in legislative progress. The Senate needs more room but it does not need it half as much as does the Supreme Court. The present session of Congress may not authorize such an appropriation as will be required to inaugurate the plan for which Senator Morrill is now sponsor but in the session to come there is likely to be more liberality. Perhaps it is possible to secure the preparatory legislation now-ine appropriation being postponed until after the election-and if that possibility presents itself Senator Morrill may be depended upon to seize it. The senior Senator from Vermont has always been sincerely interested in all matters pertaining to the National Capital and has many times shown himself to be one of the city's best friends. He will place the country under added obligations to him if he carries to successful conclusion the plans outlined in his favorable report on the Supreme Court building

Man's Inhumanity to Man.

Another life was probably sacrificed today on the city post-office building. The horrible securrence can hardly be termed an accident. for it came to pass because proper precautions were not taken for the protection of the man who was injured and the men who are likely to meet death at any moment. The Star has recently called attention to the carelessness manifested by some of the contractors who have been engaged in the work of post-office construction. In some Instances the failure to provide proper safeguards was doubtless due to thoughtlessness, but most of the fatalities which have taken place on the big skeleton of what may some day be a completed building have had their origin in an endeavor to rave to the contractors a few dollars. It cannot be alleged that work on the build-Irg has been rushed and that deaths have ensued as consequences of the hurrying process; time enough has been consumed in the doing of what has been done to permit of the employment of all reasonable means for the preservation of the lives and limbs of the wage-earners who are constantly in

A Deliverance From Veragua.

That dear creature, the Duke of Veragua, has been gossiping again; this time about the somewhat disturbed relations between Spain and the United States because of the Cuban revolution. It will, of course, be remembered that the Duke of Veragua visited this country during the Columbian celebration, and was made much of because he is a lineal descendant of Christopher Columbus, who, having discovered Cuba and some of the adjacent territory, cuts a figure in Spanish-American history. Just how much light the duke was expected to throw on the situation does not appear, but it is recorded that a newspaper correspondent was accorded an interview with "His Grace" at No. 9 Calle San Mateo, Madrid, which the same is the duke's residence when he is not visiting his friends. The correspondent assures us that "con-The correspondent assures us that "contrary to the American idea of such interviews, there was nothing stilted or formal about the whole affair. On the contrary, His Grace was affability itself." How delightful. An informal conversation "beside an antique table," with probably nothing between the two parties except the ducal headgear through the medium of which His Grace imparts his views on matters of great import.

After denouncing the suspended action of Congress as "the insult of the century" the duke comforted himself by saying that even though war should come between Spain and the United States, and even were it possible that, as a result, the Spanish nation should be wiped off the face of the earth, still the name of Spain would never be forgotten, but would go down through history revered and respected as long as there were such a place as America, with the benign shadow of a Columbus upon it. I do not believe that even the American Senators had forgotten in the excitement of the moment what their nation owes to Spain." The duke's argument is an extraordinary one, and as absurd as it is extraordinary. America does not owe Spain anything. Spanish greed resulted in the rediscovery of this continent, and Spanish greed was repaid a millionfold for all it invested. What America is it became in spite of, and not with the assistance of, Spain. At no period in our history have Spanish influences worked in any other way than to retard the progress of true civilization. We who have been reading of Spanish atrocities in Cuba-invariably denied by the Spanish authorities-will hardly be surprised to find the duke a defender of Weylerism. He says "it is unjust to think that the malefactors and half-civilized forces led by Maceo should be considered in the same light as Spanish troops. The Spanish soldiers sent to Cuba are disciplined, and, as a rule, educated men. To suppress the insurrection vigorous methods must be used. General Weyler proclaims this idea." Recognition of insurgent belligerency is, of course, impossible, because the insurgents have not, so His Grace declares, any organized army or seaport or effective administration of any kind; but Veragua makes no effort to explain Spanish inability to crush the rebellion or even to prevent the landing of munitions of war on the island.

The duke is much too sensitive as to some matters and not sensitive enough as to others. If the scheme to pension him for life with American dollars had ever amounted to anything he would have had less to say about "the insult of the cen-

A Southern Exposition Here.

The fairly tangible proposition to locate here a Southern memorial building which shall be at once a museum and an exposition will be greeted cordially. As a mere matter of business-leaving all sentiment cut of the question-every state in the Union should have here a satisfactory contribution to a permanent exposition. Washington is the place-the only placefor such an array of exhibits; it is the seat of government and the one spot where Americans meet en common ground. If the southern project is successful, it will not be long before other sections put in an appearance and representation.

There is little importance attached to the rumor that Mr. Bayard will resign and return to his home in Delaware. The idea that he could be happy anywhere out of England seems to involve an unwarranted stretch of the probabilities.

Only one hundred and twenty men completed their day's work on the city postoffice building today. There would have been one hundred and twenty-one, but the failure of the iron-contractor to do his duty reduced the number by one.

The manner in which two parts of the Spanish forces came together and, through a misapprehension tried to demolish each other suggests a certain danger in having
